Preface

In compiling this bibliography of surveys no attempt has been made to frame a definition of a survey and apply it as a standard for determining which ones to include in this list. Each one included has been found listed as a survey in some educational source. Rather than place any limitation on the number we have listed many studies we would not class as surveys from our viewpoint. We felt that omissions might prove disappointing while superfluous studies could do no harm.

Copies of surveys included have been available only in part. Since much of the data has therefore been obtained from secondary sources, the chance for errors is apparent. Corrections will be most gratefully received.

It is hoped that this list of surveys and references will be helpful to workers in the field and to students of the survey movement.

PART I

Bibliography of School Surveys

In listing surveys into four classes—city, county, state, and higher institutions—a rather broad classification has been used. The term "city" includes surveys of a particular system, such as village, town, or city. The term "county" applies to a section, such as district, township, parish, or county. The term "state" has been used to include surveys not confined to the above two classes. Special surveys of subject-matter are thus included as well as surveys of state systems. The term "higher institutions" includes surveys of normal schools, colleges, and universities.*
